

MOUNTAIN LIVING[®]

SCANDI CHIC
HOME of the
YEAR

— 25 YEARS —

WINTRY ESCAPES

A GORSUCH FAMILY HOLIDAY
LUXURIOUS MOUNTAIN RESORTS
SLIPPERS, CANDLES AND HYGGE

Fresh minimalism—a bold contrast between pale and dark, wood and leather—best describes the home's style. A handblown glass deer sculpture playfully references traditional mountain-rustic décor.

Alpine Chalet Chic

A European style reimagined for the American West

STORY IRENE RAWLINGS PHOTOGRAPHY AUDREY HALL
ARCHITECTURE PEARSON DESIGN GROUP INTERIOR DESIGN PEARSON DESIGN GROUP
CONSTRUCTION ON SITE MANAGEMENT LANDSCAPING DHM DESIGN

HOME OF THE
YEAR
2019
MOUNTAIN LIVING

“This is my very first house,” says Baran Tekkora, looking up at a chalet tucked into a snowy hillside and surrounded by majestic pines. “Every time I see it, I get such a thrill.” He goes on to explain that he has always lived in apartments—in Turkey as a boy, in the U.S. when he was in college and, now, with his family in an apartment in New York City.

Baran and his wife, Nicole, are avid skiers along with their two very active sons. This was a big consideration when they were looking for property at the Yellowstone Club, with its much-touted access to private powder. “We initially pictured ourselves coming out here in the winter but quickly realized that summers are as much—or even more—fun.”

The home they envisioned was simple and inviting but also visually stunning. The family often skis in Europe, and the homeowners were enchanted by the gentle and unmistakable shape of the stone-and-timber mountain chalets that dot Switzerland’s high alpine valleys. They wanted the interiors to be airy, light-filled and modern. They were also clear about their desire for a large kitchen, living and dining area—a loft-like gathering space. “Nicole and I knew we would be coming here with family and friends ... and always lots of kids.”

They found a ski-in,ski-out site with striking views of Pioneer and Cedar Mountains and began putting together the team that would make their vision a reality. “They brought a stack of books, historical monographs of European architecture and pages torn from magazines to our very first meeting,” recalls Larry Pearson, founding principal of Bozeman-based Pearson Design Group. “We immediately understood what they wanted and were totally on board.”

“There is a purity, beauty and simplicity to the alpine chalet style—and at the same time it sheds water and snow efficiently,” Pearson explains. European chalet-style homes typically have wide, overhanging eaves under a massive roof, balconies with hand-cut balustrades, and an abundance of wood—inside and out. They have small windows and darker levels of finish to provide a cozy refuge from the weather. >>

Lone Mountain looms tall and large over the gable-within-gable Swiss chalet-inspired home, constructed with reclaimed materials—fir, hemlock and pine. Native moss rock comes from central Montana. Wide overhanging eaves, supported by massive wooden corbels, protect windows and balconies.

"We took something historic and gave it a modern overlay," says Pearson. The Tekkoras' 6,500-square-foot, five-bedroom, five-and-a-half-bathroom home is a Montana interpretation of European sensibility with modern ideas of light, air and, of course, remarkable views. "A traditional chalet doesn't value outdoor spaces like we do in Montana, where we're out-of-doors as much as possible ... in year-round outdoor spaces," says managing principal Justin Tollefson, the project's lead architect. Overhang-protected balconies and the grand patio that runs along the side of the house provide a link to inside and out.

The three-story home not only frames the big views (through triple-glazed windows) from the main room and the master bedrooms but also captures more nuanced views from the guest rooms and balconies. Natural light—sometimes filtered through handwoven curtains—becomes part of the roomscape, providing an interplay of light and shadow as the day turns to night.

Using indigenous and reclaimed materials, typical for mountain chalets in Europe, was important to the homeowners. Bozeman-based On Site Management, tapped to do the construction, has a timber division, an old-wood acquisitions department and a custom cabinet shop. "We spent a lot of time on the selection, treatment and finishing of wood to get the patina just right," says project manager Kyle Surratt. He describes the exterior as fir and hemlock anchored by native Montana moss rock. Inside, the floors are live sawn oak planks and most of the cabinets are reclaimed antique-surfaced oak; the ceiling vaults are reclaimed hemlock. A single pretty-to-look-at staircase of reclaimed oak with hand-cut scrollwork balusters services all three floors. >>

CREATING A CHIC, ORGANICALLY INSPIRED MOUNTAIN HOME

Interior designer Leisa Kolstad of the Pearson Design Group offers these tips and techniques for creating a chic and organically inspired mountain home.

GO EARTHY AND NEUTRAL Choose a color palette that's warm and inviting. Use the indoor colors to mirror what can be seen through the windows—maybe russets, greens, browns and creamy whites. SOFTEN THE HARD SURFACES A home with wide expanses of wooden floors needs style-appropriate area rugs. Wool, mohair, cowhide, jute and sisal are great choices. Frame large windows with textured curtains made of natural fabrics like linen, flax, linen or alpaca. MIX IT UP Straight-line modern furniture pairs well with antiques and soft-under-foot rugs. One ornate piece looks stunning in an otherwise modern room. COMBINE UNLIKELY ELEMENTS OF THE UNEXPECTED Choose an iconic form and have fun with it, maybe re-creating it in an unanticipated medium: antler chandeliers made out of aluminum, for example, an antler chair upholstered in ultra-modern fabric or an oh-so-Western cow skull made out of cast glass.

In the living room, neutral-palette furnishings are simple but luxurious—a butter-soft leather sofa, natural alpaca curtains and a wood-and-concrete coffee table that separates to create extra seating.

“THERE IS A PURITY, BEAUTY AND SIMPLICITY
TO THE ALPINE CHALET.”

—ARCHITECT LARRY PEARSON

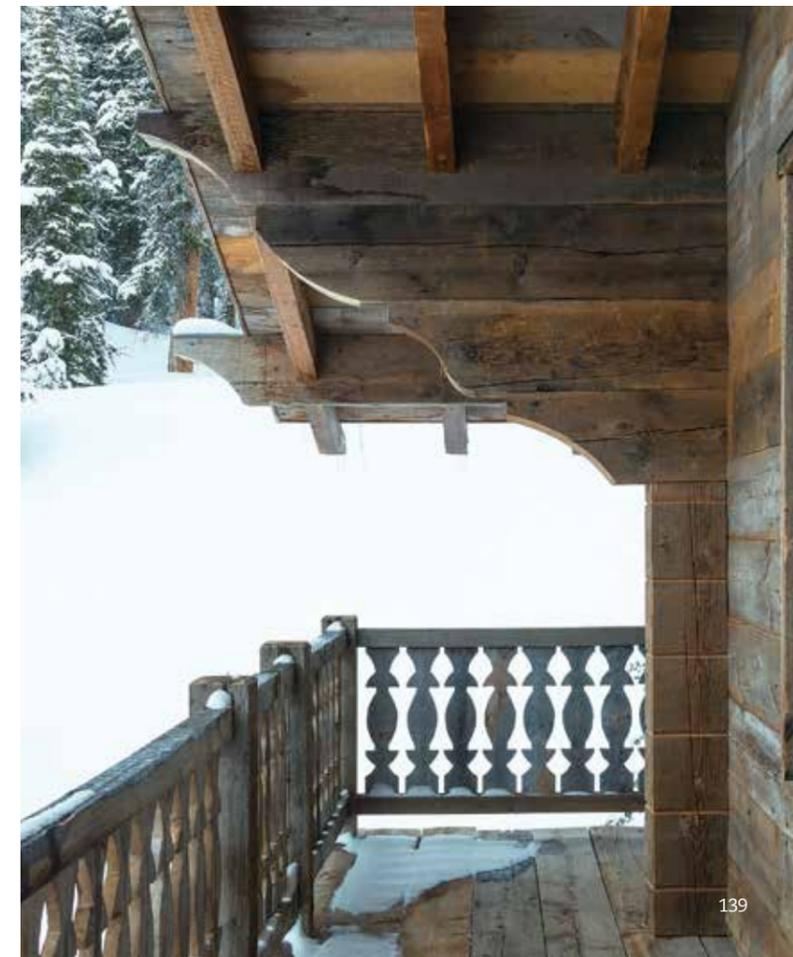

Two coats of lime plaster were skimmed onto the walls and set up a contrast with the tonality of the old wood. Juxtaposing richly patinated materials against lighter, more reflective materials creates pleasing energy and vibrancy. “How you work with the contrast to highlight each of the materials ... that’s the fundamental dance,” says Pearson.

“Rustic bones with a modern aesthetic” is how Leisa Kolstad, Pearson Design Group’s in-house interior designer, describes the home. “The rooms flow into each other in a way that’s both calm and dynamic,” she adds.

Kolstad chose a color palette that’s both earthy and neutral and provides a counterpoint to the light plaster walls and interior wood. She favors organic shapes (like the dramatic teak-root console in the entry), bold forms and laid-back-luxe textures to soften the hard surfaces. In the staircase area, for example, she paired a blown-glass chandelier that “glows softly at night” with a vintage antler chair upholstered in longhair Mongolian shearling.

The main room, which is the essence of simplicity, is the most exciting room in the house. A large limestone fireplace anchors >>

OPPOSITE: A vintage antler chair upholstered in longhair Mongolian shearling provides a stylish departure from the expected. The handblown glass chandelier cascades through all three levels. THIS PAGE, TOP: Dramatic and simple, the root console anchors the entry. BOTTOM, LEFT: The chalet on a snowy day. BOTTOM, RIGHT: Hand-carved wood is a major feature throughout the home.

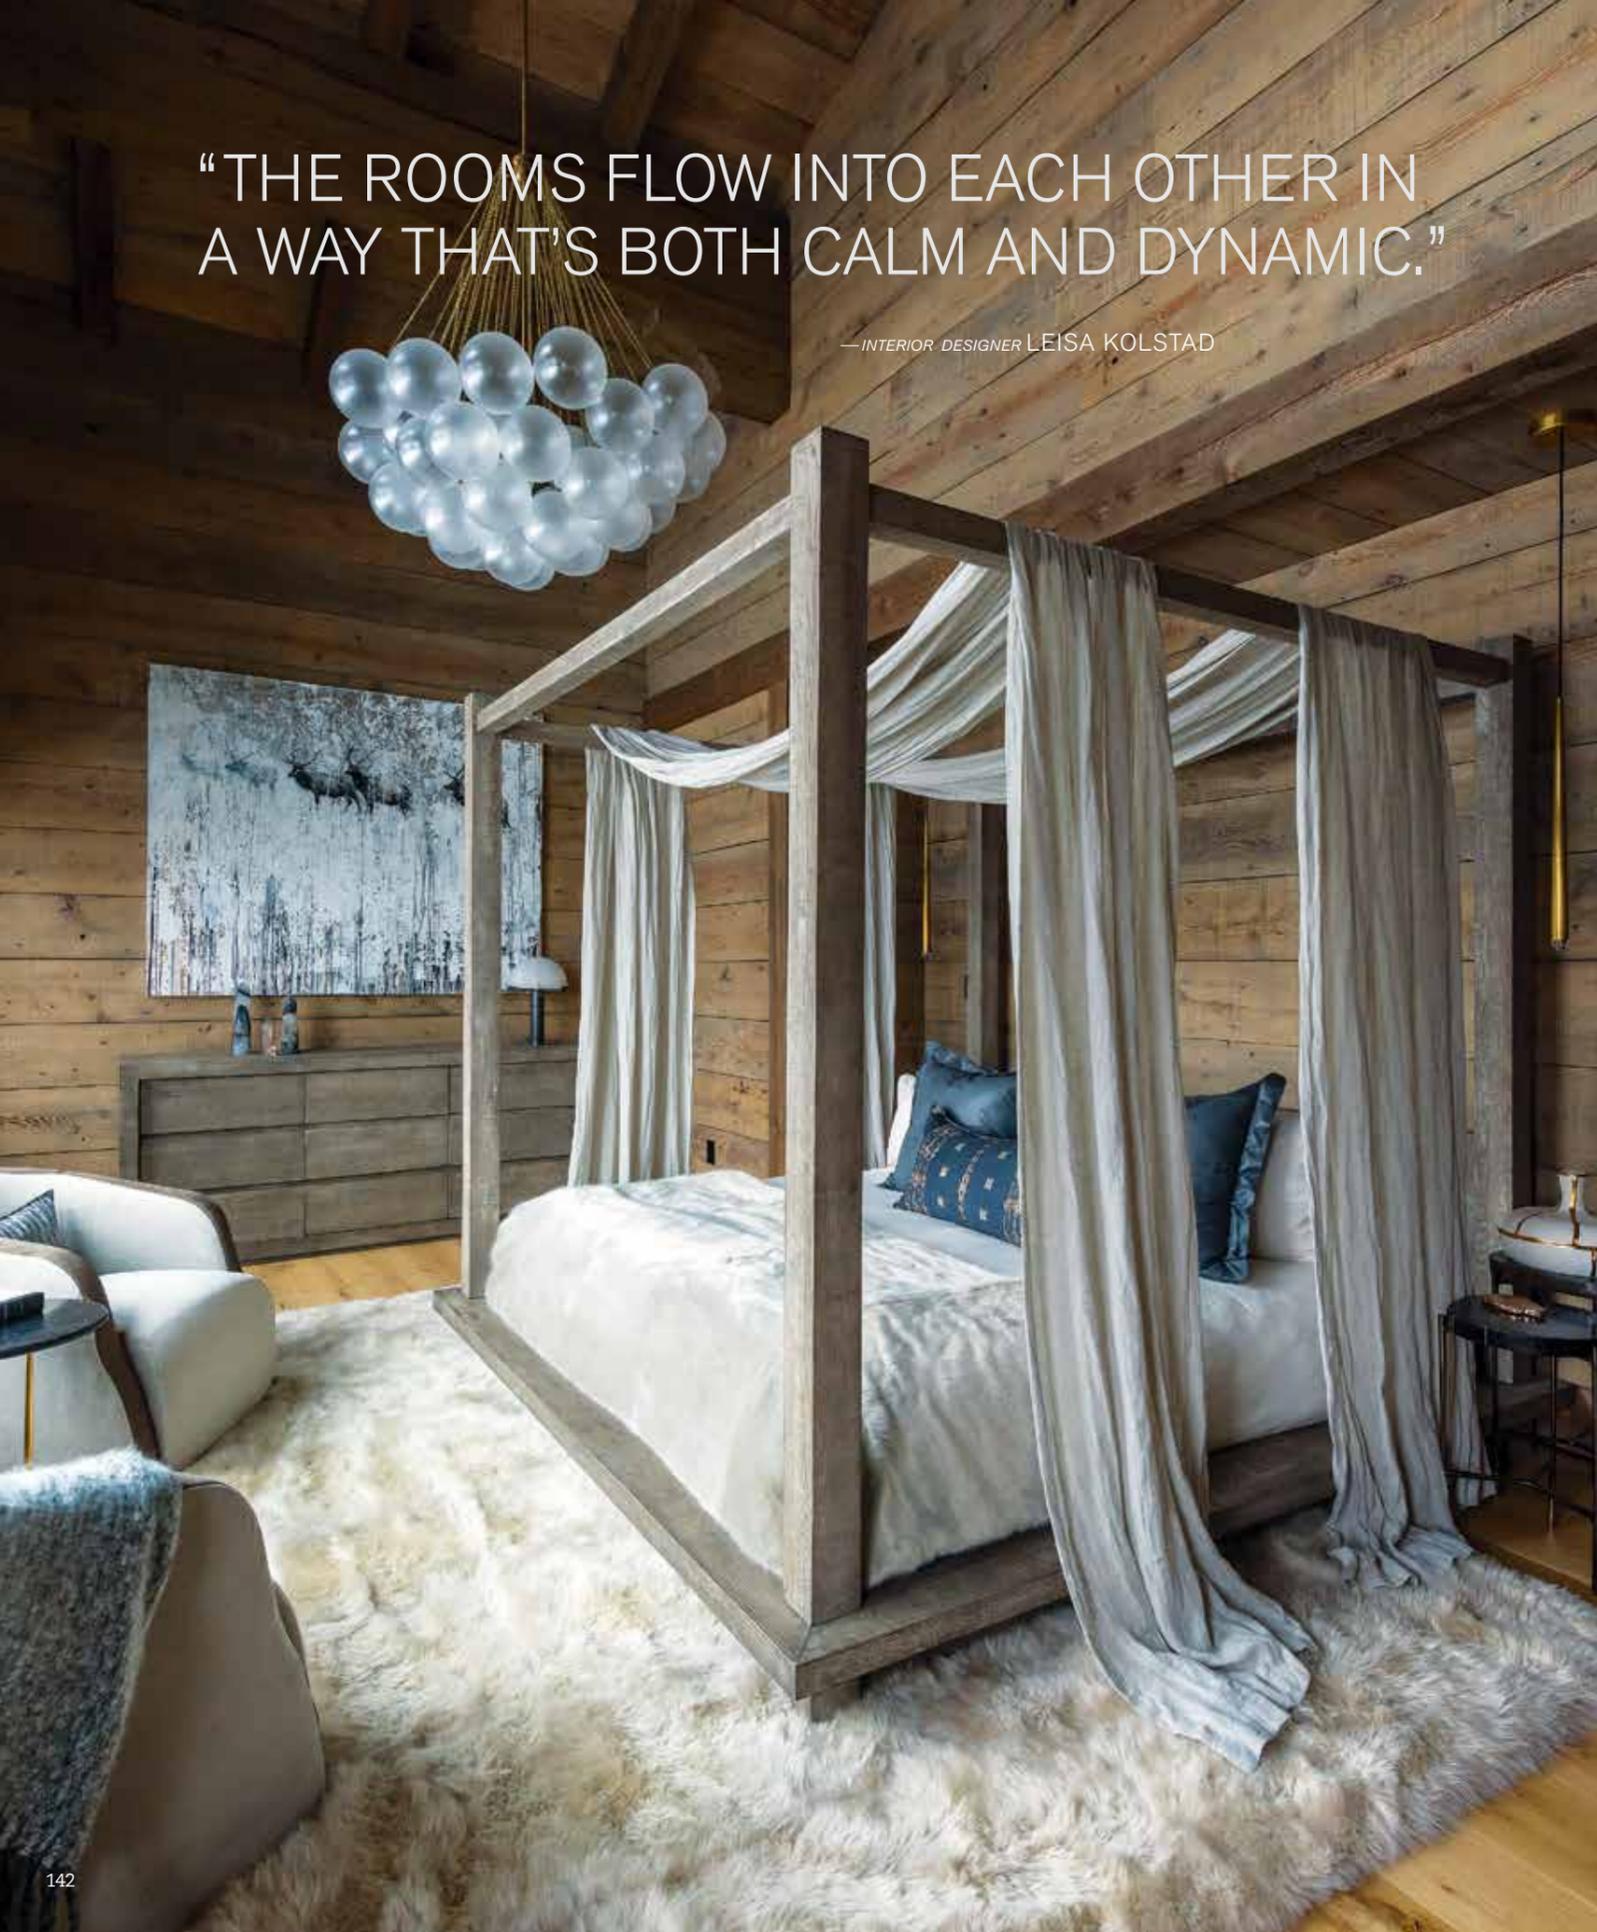

“EVERY TIME I SEE IT, I GET SUCH A THRILL.”

—HOMEOWNER BARAN TEKKORA

In the kitchen and dining area: dark concrete countertops, reclaimed wood cupboards, a handblown “raindrop” chandelier, a whitewashed, highly polished maple-slab dining table. “An oval table is more inviting for conversation,” says interior designer Leisa Kolstad.

“THE ROOMS FLOW INTO EACH OTHER IN A WAY THAT’S BOTH CALM AND DYNAMIC.”

—INTERIOR DESIGNER LEISA KOLSTAD

the space. Hung over the fireplace—yes, antlers; but, unexpectedly, made of glass and so subtle in color that “you don’t see them until you get closer and are actually in the room,” says Kolstad. Completing the décor are Italian sofas covered with butter-soft leather, soft alpaca curtains and a massive reclaimed timber console that separates the living and dining rooms. The wood-and-concrete, five-piece coffee table is modular. It works a little like a jigsaw puzzle and can be moved apart to create more seating or nestled to create more space.

The home is not only beautiful but carefully planned to be useful for future generations. Architectural plans include the possibility of adding an elevator. “The Tekkoras were very thoughtful and anticipated what their life would look like in 20 years,” says Pearson Designs Group’s Tollefson.

Baran Tekkora agrees: “We wanted a simple but handsome home that we could enjoy for many years before passing it on to our kids.” He goes on to compliment the architecture and design team by saying that this, his first home, is even more beautiful than he originally imagined. ○

OPPOSITE: In the top-floor master bedroom, a massive four-poster bed with linen swags for texture; a longhaired shearling rug for warmth. THIS PAGE, CLOCKWISE FROM TOP: Geometric-patterned tiles give the shower a Moroccan flair. A sculptural soaking tub and soft wool-and-linen draperies give the master bath a relaxing, spa-like quality. The steam room evokes a traditional hammam; hand-carved marble basins (kurnas) were imported from Turkey. Shadows cast by the pendant echo the geometric tiles.

>> For a guide to this home’s products and pros, visit mountainliving.com/HOTY2019

2019 HOME OF THE YEAR

HOME OF THE YEAR RESOURCES

ARCHITECTURE

PEARSON DESIGN GROUP
Bozeman, MT,
406-587-1997
pearsondesigngroup.com

ARCHITECTURE PROJECT STAFF

PRINCIPALS

Larry Pearson
Justin Tollefson

INTERIOR DESIGN

PEARSON DESIGN GROUP
Bozeman, MT,
406-587-1997
pearsondesigngroup.com

INTERIOR DESIGN

PROJECT STAFF
LEAD DESIGNER Leisa Kolstad

CONSTRUCTION

ON SITE MANAGEMENT
Bozeman, MT, 406-586-1500
onsitemanagement.com

CONSTRUCTION

PROJECT STAFF
Kyle Surratt
Justin Chenette

ENGINEERS

Bridger Engineers
Bozeman, MT, 406-585-0590
bridgerengineers.com

LANDSCAPE DESIGN

DHM DESIGN
Bozeman, MT, 406-219-2012
dhmdesign.com

TECHNOLOGY

Cory Reistad
SAV DIGITAL ENVIRONMENTS
Bozeman, MT, 406-586-5593
savinc.net

MASONRY

SANDOVAL MASONRY
Bozeman, MT, 406-763-4765
sandovalmasonryinc.com

CUSTOM CRAFTSMANSHIP

Custom Cabinetry, Doors,
Stairs and Handrails
ON SITE MANAGEMENT
Bozeman, MT, 406-586-1500
onsitemanagement.com

Tone-on-tone and texture-on-texture best describe the sitting room. Hair-on cowhide rugs on the floor are layered for additional texture. "The top of the coffee table is hair-on as well, so we are not introducing a lot of colors," says interior designer Leisa Kolstad.